BOTH DUELLISTS DEAD.—The steamer City of Sheffield, which plies between St. Louis and Sheffield, Ala., arrived at St. Louis Friday night and brought the details of a desperate duel which occurred on board on her last trip. The Sheffield left St. Louis on Wednesday week. When steaming up the Tennessee river Britton Johnson, of Eastport, Tenn., and William Johnson, of Liver-town, Ala., two roustabouts, became engaged in a quarrel. Other members of the crew interfered and trouble was avoided temporarily. The two Johnsons were not related and were bitter enemies. Just before reaching New Era, Tenn., on Saturday week, the Johnsons met in the gangway on the stern of the boat. Both drew revolvers, which they proceeded to use in a battle that terminated in the death of both men. Will Tittrell, a roustabout, and the only witness of the shooting, was swinging in a hammock just above the gangway. He tells the following story:
"I saw the men when they came together. They met over the hatchway in the centre of the gangway, formed by tiers of seats of outers. Both men drew their revolvers and shot at the same time. Then they ran in and climbed, keeping up a red-hot exchange of shots all the while. When seven or eight shots had been fired William Johnson, looking like a maniac, his clothing covered with blood, and his eyes bulging out of his head, staggered back, but, regaining his strength, he rushed madly at his antagonist, Britton Johnson, and, catching him around the neck, he upturned his face, and, placing his revolver close under his nose, he pulled the trigger. His head was almost blown off.
"Terribly wounded as he was, Britton staggered up against the sacks and fired one more shot at William, the bullet taking effect in the head, passing through his brain. Britton wheeled around and started to walk off, but fell dead without uttering a word.
William also fell. Later he was approached by his brother, who informed him that Britton was dead. He raised his head, smiled, turned over, and died."

FOUR DAYS ON A RAFT.—The schooner Amelia C., which arrived at Halifax, N. S., last Thursday from Grand Banks, has on board three men, the sole survivors of the crew of the British bark Hope. The Hope sailed from Nashville, N. B., August 15, bound for Port Madoe, New South Wales. On August 22, when forty miles south of Cape Race, she encountered a gale, during which she commenced to take water, getting down on her lee side, together with her heavy deck-load, threw her on her beam ends.
An effort was made to cut the deckload adrift to right her, but while the mate was cutting away the lashings the bark suddenly turned completely over.
The crew all managed to get on the keel, but were only there a few minutes when a heavy sea dashed over the upturned vessel, carrying them all into the ocean.
A large number of dead men from the deck were floating about, and on to them the men came. Three of the men—boatswain Wm. Rees, and able seaman Arthur Frank Joffe and John Nicholas—managed to construct a raft, but others were not successful, and all of them finally succumbed. The three men named drifted about on their raft for four days, during which they sighted several vessels and made signals, but it was not till the 25th that the schooner Amelia C. saw and rescued them. During the time the three men were on the raft they suffered intensely, both from hunger and thirst, and in order to keep their tongues moist, Joffe cut the straps from his sea boots into pieces, and these straps they chewed. Just before being rescued, they had about given up all hope, and Nicholas had become so weak that he could not cling to the raft himself, and had to be held on by his comrades.

AIDED IN HER OWN MURDER.—Late Yokohama papers contain a startling story from Japan.
A young man in Dango Province slew his wife in order to secure her liver with which to cure his mother's failing eyesight. Some quack told him to try chicken liver for his mother's blindness, and when this failed suggested he get a human liver, and declared the mother must eat it raw. He determined to sacrifice his child and told his wife the baby must die. She refused to permit the sacrifice, but offered herself instead, and helped him to strangle herself.
Then the husband cut out her liver, but before he could use it his crime was discovered and he was arrested.
